

Complaints to the BBC: January 2013

The BBC answered just over 14,500 complaints from the audience during January 2013. These ranged from a small number of complaints about alleged breaches of editorial guidelines through to a much larger collection of views about programme content and services.

There were complaints about the decision to reschedule Sunday religious programming on BBC Radio 2 to 6am, with Sunday Half Hour no longer being broadcast at 8.30pm.

We also received complaints from viewers of The Nolan Show in Northern Ireland who felt the political make-up of the studio audience was biased towards the Unionist/Loyalist viewpoint.

An episode of the Tweenies also attracted complaints from viewers who were unhappy that the character 'Max' appeared to be based on Jimmy Savile.

The BBC's responses to some recent issues can be read on the BBC Complaints website.
